*Both the IRS and the Board of Pensions require non-accountable allowances to be treated as ordinary income. For example, if an auto allowance of $3,600 is paid in direct payments of $300 per month to the pastor without requiring documentation of actual expenses, it is considered ordinary income and is subject to pension dues. If auto expenses are reimbursed on the basis of vouchered mileage reports and are paid at up to the IRS Standard Mileage Rate per mile, those payments are not treated as income by either the IRS or the Board of Pensions. The same holds true for other professional expense allowances.

 Previous is previously reported year, Current is new salary information regardless of the date of filling out the form.
